NYC voters hit polls to find new mayor

Big day. Mayoral hopeful Bill de Blasio was ahead in the first exit polls to be released by press time.

As the last votes came in at 9 p.m., exit polls suggested Public Advocate Bill de Blasio had a wide lead in the Democratic mayoral primary.

De Blasio had 42 percent, followed by former City Comptroller Bill Thompson at 26 percent and City Council Speaker Christine Quinn at 18, according to the earliest exit poll.

With those numbers, de Blasio would avoid a runoff election, which is required if no one candidate gets 40 percent of the vote.

But even before results of the primaries came in, de Blasio was confident he'd find the results favorable.

Early Tuesday morning, de Blasio cast his vote in Park Slope with his wife Chirlane McCray.

"[I] feel great," de Blasio said. "Looking forward to voting."

After voting, de Blasio said his team was prepared for a runoff.

"We've been planning all along for it," he said. "Our team is energized and ready."

But City Council Speaker Quinn also seemed sure of herself early in the day, and as actual results came in, things still seemed up in the air: When 6 percent of precincts had been tallied, de Blasio was at 36, Thompson at 23, and Quinn at 15, though the numbers continued to fluctuate.

Voting with her wife Kim Catullo in Chelsea Tuesday morning, Quinn also expressed confidence in a potential runoff.

"I always knew this was going to be a fight to the end," Quinn said. "Three weeks from now we'll be back here again and I'll win the runoff."

Bill Thompson, who is running a strong second in the exit polls, wrapped up a 24-hour tour of the city by voting with his wife Elsie up in Harlem on Tuesday morning.

Elsewhere in the city, comptroller candidate Scott Stringer and mayoral candidate Anthony Weiner both toted their sons into the voting booth with them.

Stringer's wife and infant son Miles were on hand as well. Weiner's wife, Huma Abedin, reportedly did not accompany her husband.

And Eliot Spitzer, running against Stringer for city comptroller, was seen heading over to the polls solo, no family in sight.

On the Republican side, with 1 percent of precincts reporting, it appeared that Republican candidate and former MTA Chairman Joe Lhota was besting his opponent, Gristedes mogul John Catsimatidis, 54 percent to 40 percent. George McDonald was trailing with 5 percent.

Though Lhota didn't speak much on his chances — saying only "so far, so good" — his wife was visibly excited after having cast her vote.

"It's just an incredibly experience to be able to vote for someone who you know you love and who's so accomplished and just so ready to go on day one as mayor," Tamra Lhota enthused.

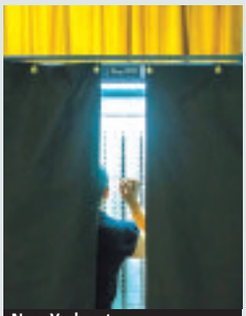
Election 2013

Undecided voters flip-flop before primary

Thirty minutes before casting her vote in the Democratic mayoral primary Tuesday afternoon, Hilary Schwartz made a snap decision, voting for City Council Speaker Christine Quinn instead of Public Advocate Bill de Blasio.



New York voter / GETTY IMAGES

"I support de Blasio, but I want a runoff because I feel like I don't know enough about him," said Schwartz, 43, outside of her Chinatown polling site.

Schwartz was far from the only New Yorker making last-minute decisions before Tuesday's election.

In a Quinnipiac poll conducted over the weekend, 8 percent of likely Democratic primary voters were still undecided.

Another 18 percent of voters who expressed support for a particular candidate in the same poll said there was a "good chance" they'd change their minds before Tuesday's election.

NYC voters struggle with lever machines

Broken. Problems with the old lever voting machines grew over the course of the election day.

Despite concern that the return to the old lever machines would be problematic, at 8:30 a.m. Tuesday morning Board of Election Executive Director Jack Ryan said things were "going very well," with no reports of machine breakdowns.

But by noon, two groups running a phone line for voters who run into poll trouble said the city's "long history of problem-plagued elections continued today."

New York Public Interest Research Group said its phone line handled 76 complaints by noon, 50 percent of which were reporting broken machines. According to NYPIRG, the city's 311 system received 73 election-related complaints by 9 a.m.

One mayoral candidate experienced problems with the machines.

Republican Joe Lhota went to vote at his polling site in Brooklyn Heights, only to find the machine was broken. He was given a paper ballot so that he could vote.

Voters with less resources, however, also faced problems.

Mal Al, 46, an East Village resident, said he had to get help from an attendant for the voting machine he used.

Busy day for voters

The city buzzed throughout the day with voting problems.

- Democratic mayoral candidate Anthony Weiner reportedly also encountered difficulties, and nearly had to vote by affidavit.
- City politicians took to Twitter to notify the Board of Elections of problems in their district.
- To their credit, the Board of Elections maintained an active presence on Twitter throughout the day.

Two 80-foot steel columns from the wreckage of the twin towers will never be moved from the lobby of the 9/11 Memorial Museum, always standing in contrast to the changing world beyond the pavilion's glass exterior.

Seen when visitors enter the pavilion, this view symbolizes the past and future, which organizers hope to capture in the museum's exhibitions.

"It's a perfect juxtaposition," explained 9/11 Memorial president Joe Daniels, pointing behind the rusted columns to One World Trade Center.

When museum visitors begin their descent past the columns into the historical galleries beneath memorial, they will first walk through a soundscape of people describing their memories of the day's events.

"We set up the idea that this event was an unprecedented experience of collective witness to a single event," museum director Alice Greenwald said.

Fatal day

"Where do you begin a story that so many people have their own memory of?"

Alice Greenwald, director of 9/11 Memorial Museum

When the museum opens next spring, the historical exhibition will be reached through a maze-like slope, seven stories below the plaza.

Beginning with the soundscape, visitors will follow the slope to a long staircase — next to the "survivor's staircase" through which hundreds escaped the towers — and travel down into the exhibition where, in one large area to the right, victims are memorialized.

To the left, past a closed-off section where 9/11 families can visit unidentified remains of victims, galleries explore the history of attacks.

The layout reflects the museum's purpose, commemorating what is a dark day in the American consciousness while educating visitors on the significance of Sept. 11.

Greenwald, who began working on the museum seven and a half years ago, hopes the galleries will help those born after the attacks grasp their importance.

"It's a place to be, to pay respects, but also to try to understand the world they're living in," Greenwald said.

NYPD. Sleeping woman attacked in her Brooklyn home

A would-be rapist broke into a 21-year-old woman's home and attacked her in her sleep Sunday morning, police said.

The suspect entered the residence on Metropolitan Avenue in Williamsburg about 12:30 a.m., climbed on top of the sleeping victim and attempted to rape her, police said. A struggle ensued and the attacker ended up fleeing through a window.

Police released a surveillance video of the suspect, who is described as a Hispanic male, between 5-foot-4 and 5-foot-7. He was last seen wearing a white T-shirt with a design on the left shoulder.

Anyone with information regarding this incident is asked to call Crime Stoppers at 1-800-577-TIPS (8477). The public can also submit tips by logging on to the Crime Stoppers website.

Money. The father of the toddler killed in a shooting wants the media to pay up for his story.

The father of a 1-year-old boy who was shot and killed in his stroller earlier this month refuses to cooperate with police, but he is willing to talk to the press if it means earning some extra cash.

A man claiming to be Anthony Hennis, Antiq Hennis' father, contacted both The New York Post and The New York Daily News this week, trying to sell them interviews.

"It doesn't have to be like you're paying me to talk," the man told the Post. "You could be donating to help my family."

The caller claimed he was fielding offers from media outlets, including one from the News for $15,000. Meanwhile, the News reports the man called to make the same pitch. The Post verified that the call came from a number associated with Hennis' grandmother. Neither the Post nor the News complied.

Two suspects, 23-year-old Daquan Breland and 19-year-old Daquan Wright, have been arrested in connection with the shooting.

Plenty of evidence

Much of speech was to lay out the case

President Obama argued that Syria should face consequences for using such weapons because much of the world has long since adopted a ban on chemical weapons and that if the civilized world does nothing to respond, it will only embolden U.S. adversaries.

"If we fail to act, the Assad regime will see no reason to stop using chemical weapons," said Obama. REUTERS

Obama calls for pause in authorizing strikes on Syria

Hurdles. Any effort to secure and destroy Syrian chemical weapons faces significant logistical problems.

President Barack Obama pulled the U.S. from the brink of a military strike against Syria to pursue "encouraging signs" of a possible diplomatic solution to the confrontation over the Assad regime's use of chemical weapons.

In a nationally televised speech from the White House that attempted to navigate between international calls for action and a war-weary public back at home, Obama said he's asked Congress to delay a vote authorizing the use of military force while the administration pursues a proposal that would have Syria surrender its chemical arms.

The president's address was originally intended to be the capstone of an administration-wide lobbying campaign to win congressional authorization for U.S. military action against the Syrian regime of Bashar al-Assad.

Instead, over the last day and a half, Obama's threat of an imminent military strike receded as fast-moving diplomatic negotiations unfolded in a standoff over Syria's chemical weapons stockpile.

While the shift gives Obama an opportunity to escape a likely defeat in Congress, it throws him into unpredictable negotiations with Russian President Vladimir Putin, Assad's most powerful patron and a leader who has emerged as a chief antagonist of Obama during his second term. BLOOMBERG

To 5c or not to 5c: Which iPhone will work for you?

Choice. Two new iPhones — 5c and 5s — debut. Each comes with its own advantages.

The new iPhone 5c is displayed during an Apple product announcement at the Apple campus yesterday in Cupertino, Calif. / GETTY IMAGES

Though Apple's announcement yesterday was far from a surprise due to the amount of leaked information, consumers applauded the arrival of the two newest iPhones.

The iPhone 5c contains all the existing technology of the iPhone 5, but in five bright colors: lime green, pure white, robin's egg blue, coral and bright yellow. Despite being made of a seamless hard plastic, it won't be flimsy. It will be steel reinforced and contain a multi-band antenna.

The iPhone 5s will have a new A7 chip and come in silver, gold and dark gray. It will also be the first smartphone to be 64 bits, and will operate 40 times faster than the original iPhone.

It's expected to have a battery life that allows for 10 hours of LTE and Wi-Fi browsing, 40 hours of music and 250 hours of standby time.

It will also contain an M7 chip that will continuously measure motion data, as well as an accelerometer, compass and gyroscope — making it the perfect device for health and fitness apps.

The phone's camera will allow more light and have auto white balance and true tone flash. It will be able to capture everything in extreme detail with the new 1.5-micron pixel camera.

Intel makes tiny chips for Dick Tracy-style gadgets

Intel is working on a new line of ultra-small and ultra-low-power microchips for wearable devices like smart watches and bracelets, a bid by the company to make sure it will be at the crest of the next big technology wave after arriving late to the smartphone and tablet revolution.

The new line of chips, called Intel Quark, will ship next year and include an ingestible version aimed at biomedical uses, Intel President Renee James told reporters late on Monday.

The Quark chips will be five times smaller and 10 times more power efficient than Intel's Atom chips for tablets and smartphones, she said.

Solemn ceremonies planned for anniversary of 9/11 attacks

Americans will commemorate the 12th anniversary of the 9/11 attacks with solemn ceremonies and pledges to not forget the nearly 3,000 killed when hijacked jetliners crashed into the World Trade Center, the Pentagon and a Pennsylvania field.

Today's 12th anniversary may not capture the same attention as others, such as two years ago, when the 10th anniversary was also the first following the death of Osama bin Laden from a May 2011 raid by U.S. forces in Pakistan.

New York City will repeat the ritual of reading of the names of all 2,983 people who died in the terrorist attacks. REUTERS

Controversial. Fierce opposition to a "disgusting" event on 9/11 has emerged.

The 12th anniversary commemorations of Sept. 11 terrorist attacks that killed nearly 3,000 people in the U.S. could be overshadowed by a rally in Washington against victimization of Muslims.

The American Muslim Political Action Committee listed "erosion of domestic civil liberties, drone policy ... illegal tapping and surveilling," among its reasons for the action.

"We are not trying to be controversial," MD Rabbi Alam, AMPAC founder and Senate candidate in Missouri, told Metro. "It is on this date to show solidarity for the people killed. We are Americans standing up for American values — people need to know that Muslims are being mistreated."

The view is supported by human rights groups, with the American Civil Liberties Union stating: "In the wake of 9/11 ... no area of American Muslim civil society has been left untouched by discriminatory and illegitimate government action."

However, the rally's organizers are under fire for promoting 9/11 conspiracy theories, with both Alam and AMPAC spokesman Dr. Kevin Barrett suggesting it was an inside job. Barrett runs Truthjihad.com, which "takes on the big 9/11 lie put forth by our government."

Joe Connor, whose brother died on 9/11, branded the march "ridiculous" and "disgusting." A rival group is dispatching a mass convoy of motorcyclists to Washington — "2 million bikers to DC" — to challenge the march.

1 The Situation gives Snooki tips for 'DWTS'

Mike "The Situation" Sorrentino wishes nothing but the best for his former "Jersey Shore" roomie Nicole "Snooki" Polizzi's turn on the new season of "Dancing with the Stars" — but he does wonder if she's got what it takes to last in the competition. "I don't know if she's gonna be able to do four rounds, because I did four rounds of 'Dancing with the Stars' when I went and it's not as easy as she thinks," the reality star told Metro on Tuesday, during a discussion about his addiction to prescription painkillers (more on that in an upcoming issue). The new mom can at least count on some votes from her former smoosh buddy: "I will be watching, I will be voting, but I don't know if she's gonna go four rounds," he says.

2 Jane Lynch is paying a hefty alimony

JANE LYNCH
JASON MERRITT

Now that gay marriage is legal, gay divorces are a very real, very expensive thing. Case in point? Jane Lynch's divorce from Lara Embry, which is shaping up to be a pricey one indeed. The "Glee" star is reportedly being asked to pay more than $90,000 per month in spousal support to Embry for an annual total of $1.1 million, according to TMZ. A document filed last week lists monthly expenses including $12,000 for entertainment, $5,000 for charitable donations and $4,500 for meals at restaurants, though $59,909 of the amount requested is meant to go toward "unknown" expenses. The pair separated earlier this summer after three years of marriage. Lynch seems OK with the development, at least, telling a photographer outside a West Hollywood cafe, "I think it's the law, isn't it? I think it's the law, so I go with the law." Way to take it on the chin, Jane.

3 Cyrus smashes records with 'Wrecking Ball'

Sorry, One Direction. Sorry, Syria. Sorry, New York City mayoral race. Sorry, 12th anniversary of 9/11. It's all Miley, all the time. The singer's new video for "Wrecking Ball," where she rides on a wrecking ball in boy underwear (or nothing at all!) and cries a lot and wags her tongue, is breaking page view records with a whopping 15 million views in less than 24 hours, according to video host Vevo.

"Wrecking Ball has officially beat the @VEVO record. ??????????thank you smilerzzzzz" she tweeted. The former record was held by British boy band One Direction with 10.9 million views for "Best Song Ever." But then again, they kept their clothes on.

Rage against 'The Machine'

"Chess is pugilism." This quote is the battle cry for a surprisingly thrilling new work.

How do you write a play about a historical chess tournament and keep it engaging for audiences — even when they likely know how the real-life story turned out?

In Matt Charman's "The Machine," it's done by interjecting snippets of engaging backstory about the men behind the chess pieces, humanizing them to their utmost, and giving the seemingly intellectual pursuit more than a few emotional stakes as well.

The majority of the play takes place in 1997, during the famous six-game match between world chess prodigy Garry Kasparov (Hadley Fraser) and the newest IBM supercomputer, Deep Blue. Other scenes cover the formative moments in the rigid upbringing of Russian Kasparov and the Carnegie Mellon collegiate days of Feng-hsiung Hsu (Kenneth Lee), the lead developer of Deep Blue.

The tone is set well before the actors take their marks. The theater is arranged like a sporting arena within the massive 55,000-square-foot drill hall of the Park Avenue Armory, with stadium seating on four sides of the stage, which is topped with screens, a la scoreboards. On these screens, audience members watch the tournament unfolding as if through their TVs, the way many watched the event in real time from their couches at home more than a decade ago.

Close-up aerial views of the men's dizzying feats of accelerated chess-playing are stunning on a meta level, making viewers keenly aware of the amount of work that must have gone into the actors' choreography to reenact those notorious chess moves.

Of course, in this story, the men who face off in the tournament are themselves like machines, while the machine takes on suspiciously humanistic characteristics.

Toeing the line between technophobia and all-too-human paranoia, this play keenly balances both sides of the board, setting up a taut and thrilling parable where the lines between antagonist/protagonist are blurred and absolutely nothing is black-and-white.

The first cut is always the deepest

Interview. James Franco collaborator and "Child of God" star Scott Haze grants us his debut interview.

Dallas native Scott Haze has been pals with James Franco for quite a while, and even played a role in Franco's adaptation of William Faulkner's "As I Lay Dying." But they reach a new level of collaboration with "Child of God," based on Cormac McCarthy's novel. To prepare for his role, Haze moved to Tennessee, shunned society and lived in a cave. He was far more social when we caught up with him.

The work you did for this role was intense!
Moving to Tennessee was a drastic thing, but I thought it was necessary to actually fully grasp what it would mean, to bring truthfulness to this character. The place in Tennessee that I moved to was in the middle of nowhere, actually where Cormac wrote the novel, so I wanted to go there to get it as authentic as possible. You know, being alone for that amount of time did something to me. [Laughs]

That's a luxury, getting to spend that much time preparing for a role.
It has all the elements that you look for as an actor, that you can really sink your teeth into. Some roles you don't need to do that for, you don't need to move to Tennessee and sleep in caves, isolate yourself.

How is it for you taking this film to Toronto?
I feel like it's a throwback to movies like "Taxi Driver" and movies where it's just storytelling. You don't have product placement in movies like this, so to go to Toronto with "Child of God" is an incredible, incredible thing to do.

You have adapted both McCarthy and Faulkner. How do they compare as source material?
If you look at literature in terms of who really captured the South, the grandmaster, I believe, is Faulkner. These stories that he wrote really strip down the truth of what that time was like, and if you look at Cormac's work, he is a lot like Faulkner in the sense of there's not a lot of stuff that isn't necessary.

Next project

Adaptation

You and James are making "The Sound and the Fury" next.
It's going to be a blast. It doesn't get much better than that, for myself as an actor, to be involved in one of the greatest novels written, in my opinion.

Crate and Barrel and Paola Navone bring the party to your place

Style. This fall, your wardrobe isn't the only thing getting revamped.

First, Ikea released its sleek upscale Stockholm collection inspired by mid-century modern classics. H&M followed with the launch of their much-anticipated home line and e-commerce site — seriously, the copper candle holders and knit throws look straight out of a high-end boutique. Now, Crate and Barrel is leaving us no choice but to start hosting.

The furnishings brand partnered with renowned Italian interior designer Paola Navone — a wiz at creating funky, modern decor inspired by Asian and African handicrafts — for three collections, the first of which centers on "casual entertaining."

So what exactly do casual shindigs mean for Navone?

Based on the first installation — launching exclusively on Crateandbarrel.com this week — we'd say a packed dinner party with lots of good eats. The designer created tabletop essentials, including platters, bowls, cutlery sets and linens in electric blue-and-white patterns (she was inspired by the Mediterranean). To shake things up, pops of red appear on a swirly candleholder and industrial lights, and a woven chair with reclaimed teak legs add warmth.

The collection also includes 11 dining table options, which shoppers can mix and match with nine seating styles. Our favorite is the gray and white Como bench, complete with elegant backrest.

No one's leaving our table hungry — or with a backache.

Fashion Week: The b

DAY 5

1 p.m. Some random thoughts

A few random thoughts while waiting for Ohne Titel to start:

• Valentino Rockstuds seem to be about as inescapable as Robin Thicke's "Blurred Lines." Song of summer, meet shoe of spring/summer.

• What's up with all the beanies? Women are wearing the winter hat like it's not 80 degrees.

• The atmosphere here at Milk Studios is so much more tolerable than Lincoln Center. It's free of all the tacky promotions, plus it's right across the street from Chelsea Market. Win-win. KENYA HUNT

1:20 p.m. Ohne Titel

Skirt hemlines have risen noticeably this season, as much as six inches higher than the fall/winter offerings in stores now. The shapes have become curvier, too. Alex Adams and Flora Gill have always been good at rendering vaguely body-con dressing cool and intelligent rather than just merely being sexy in a one-note way, and there's more of that here today. Their graphic, body-skimming skirts and dresses are just as technically impressive as always, with new optical illusory prints added to give that obligatory element of newness. But is there enough "new" there? Alex and Flora seem to cook up their house codes on a slow burn, refining the look a little bit each season rather than changing dramatically for change's sake. That's a refreshing quality. But their work from season to season is beginning to blur together, which makes me think it's time for them to take more risks. KENYA HUNT

2 p.m. Karen Walker pre-show

Before we can enter Karen Walker's show, security divides everyone up by row number, making us stand and wait in various areas of the lobby before our sections are called. I feel like I'm boarding a flight. "The set must be really spectacular," one writer says, trying to make sense of the unusual process for entry. We take turns imagining what the setup could be like inside, only to be ushered to find your typical runway in a white box. KENYA HUNT

2:20 p.m. Karen Walker

"Eastern meets urban" is how Walker describes her Spring/Summer '14 work, which is a mix of strong, slouchy trouser suits and dhoti pants in warm, beachy colors inspired by India, plus collegiate references (again, what's with the knit beanies?) that feel weak and tired. KENYA HUNT

3:10 p.m. Phillip Lim pre-show

The day started off with a walk through sand at Tommy Hilfiger, and now editors in their best skinny stilettos are precariously treading through a salt-crystal-covered floor at 3.1 Phillip Lim. I hurry to my seat to pick out the crystals stuck in my shoes. TINA CHADHA

3:20 p.m. Phillip Lim

Who knew Phillip Lim was such a geology buff? The designer cited geode-formations and raw landscapes as inspiration for spring. And so far, the looks coming down the runway are a pretty literal translation. There are prints inspired by geodes, splattered mud and abstract wood grains on roomy knee-length skirts, breezy blouses with sheer panels and kimono-style moto jackets. The color palette of pearly whites, deep blues and earthy tans echo the elements, too — as do cracked metallic separates with foil, which remind me of wet rocks glistening in the sun. But the theme also seems to run a bit deeper. For Lim, whose line for mass retailer Target launches Sept. 15, it's also about pairing down to the basics. Any one of his trousers — from the striped jacquard pencil to the cuffed wide-leg — could work for a modern career girl. TINA CHADHA

4 p.m. Donna Karan

Donna Karan has become a bit of an earth mother; her clothes increasingly reference nature in some form or another. This collection works with a similar theme as Karen Walker's — New York meets India — but the end result is completely different. Whereas Walker was dressing the hipster on that quarter-life crisis self-discovery mission in the East, Karan is speaking to the older woman who considers far-flung places a second home, whose wardrobe reflects her travels and worldview. There are sinewy dresses and sarong skirts, airy shirts and languorous outerwear. It's not the most ground-breaking collection from Karan, but her loyalists shopping for work and play will probably not even care. KENYA HUNT

5:10 p.m. Alice + Olivia

Designer Stacey Bendet always brings a party to Fashion Week. Inside the packed Alice + Olivia outing, waiters are passing out cocktails and mini tequila-lime popsicles as show-goers circulate the various vignettes, trying to snag the best shots of models for their Twitter followers. TINA CHADHA det's spring collection feels more polished than her recent outings. She plays with proportion and shows a mix of flirty minis worn with button-downs, sweaters and shrunken jackets, and full voluminous ball gown skirts paired with casual crop tops or polos. The theme of the collection, according to show notes, is "prep meets pretty," and so tailored blazers and skinny pleated trousers are thrown in the mix. For the party girl, there are feminie lace shorts, a crystal-encrusted bustier and flapper-esque looks. TINA CHADHA

6 p.m. Maria Cornejo

It's interesting to note the differences in the way women see themselves dressing versus the way men do. Most of the women designers I've interviewed say they create clothes with themselves in mind. I'd guess that Maria Cornejo does the same. There's an unfussy easiness to her collections that works for real life. The construction is complex, but the shapes are flattering and low-maintenance. The shoes, while provocative, aren't so high that you can't pound the pavement in them. Men might dominate the creative direction of fashion, but women designers are still the best at addressing the function of fashion, and Cornejo is the best example of this. Her sculptural jackets and coats, loosely tailored trousers and fluid skirts and jumpsuits reveal a clear technique, but she doesn't sacrifice a woman's ability to get on with her day. And interestingly, this is the third collection today to explore the idea of wanderlust through desert tones and vaguely traditional ethnic patterns and shapes. I'm sensing a trend. KENYA HUNT

DAY 6

9:30 a.m. J.Crew pre-show

It's been 10 minutes since the doors opened and the venue is already over capacity. You'd think there was a Justin Timberlake/Jay-Z concert going on. TINA CHADHA

9:40 a.m. J.Crew

Before we even get to the clothes, let's discuss the spot-on styling and accessories. The models are wearing fun, hot pink pouts, cool sunnies and statement jewels, but the shoes stand out most. The first thing that catches my eye is a pair of tan cut-out booties with bead detailing. A quick scan of the room reveals many more lust-worthy pairs: quirky floral pumps, strappy tie-ups in rainbow colors and classic weave sling-backs, which all complement the collection of neon-bright sportswear and tailored classics here.

California surfers coupled with imagery of turn-of-the-century Venetian coasts provided the jumping-off point for womenswear designer Tom Mora. That yielded looks a bit dressy, yet laid-back, in classic Jenna Lyons style. TINA CHADHA

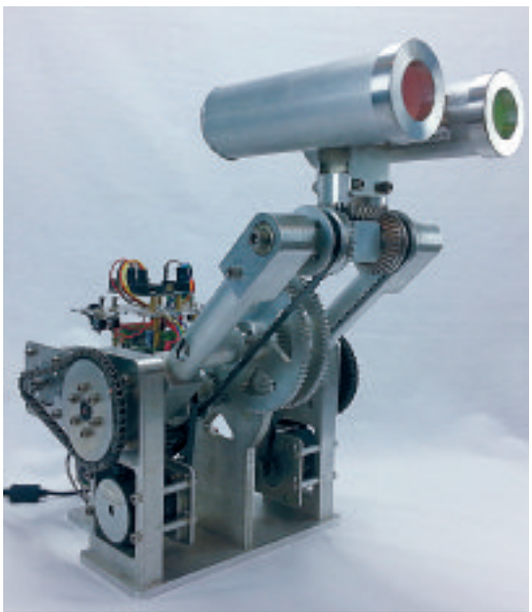
The new Walter II is a machinist's masterpiece



The Walter II, a robot built by a carpenter, is on view at this year's World Maker Faire. / WORLD MAKER FAIRE

World Maker Faire. The brainchild of Chris the Carpenter, this robot may make him consider a name change to Chris the Metalworker.

Chris the Carpenter, a long-time member of Let's Make Robots and founder of Rocket Brand Studios, presents a masterpiece of machining.

Chris not only designed and built Walter II, he designed and built all the tools he used to make him.

For a self-named carpenter, Chris has some pretty amazing metal-working skills.

The original Walter that Chris refers to in the video that you can find online is a robot he built, improved upon and re-built over the course of several years.

Walter was dormant for some time, while Chris has been busy acquiring the skills and tools he has needed to launch his own small robotics business.

A good idea never dies, though, and so Walter II was born. You can see Walter II at the Let's Make Robots table at World Maker Faire in New York.

Denise Austin wants you to walk this way

Fitness. The exercise pro says that you can turn your casual neighborhood strolls into calorie-torching workouts.

The Mayo Clinic says that adding 30 minutes of brisk walking to your daily routine will burn about 150 more calories a day. / PROVIDED

As a 30-year veteran of the fitness world, with over 100 instructional DVDs to her name, Denise Austin has likely seen every fitness trend out there. However, one workout routine that she swears by is one of the simplest forms of movement: walking.

For Austin, however, simple walking is not a complete workout. The fitness expert's latest DVD, "Fat Burning Walk" is a 30-minute program for home use. While you might not think of walking as a high cardio activity, Austin says you should reconsider.

"I keep the heart rate up for 30 minutes — that's when the fat starts burning," she says. "I take you through some intervals that pick up the speed. When you do all the moves, it's a great combo of muscle conditioning and cardio."

The DVD begins with a warm-up and ends with a cool down and, in between, there are exercises for arm toning, leg strengthening, butt sculpting and waist-whittling.

Austin says that anyone can do this kind of workout — even those who find exercise difficult. Also, unlike running and extreme interval training, the moves in "Fat Burning Walk" are easier on the joints.

"It's great for people who travel and want to keep up their exercise regimen while they're away," Austin says.

"It's designed to be convenient and stress-free. It's designed to make you feel self-accomplishment, because it is designed for success. And success makes you feel good about yourself."

Try it

The moves

Everyone knows how to walk, but here are some exercises that complete Austin's workout.

1 "Work your glutes, thighs and upper body with this exercise. Kick your leg up; consider it like a backward leg curl paired with an arm curl to the front to really feel it."

2 "Work those arms and your upper body while reaching your steps goal. Really do strong punches while extending your arms."

Brief periods of exercise can prevent weight gain

Location of study: U.S.
Study subjects: Data study
Results: Brief periods of rigorous physical activity can prevent weight gain as effectively as the recommended 10-minute-plus intervals, says a new study in the American Journal of Health Promotion. People are encouraged to exercise at least 150 minutes per week at a moderate or high intensity.
Significance: For people who don't exercise, the study found that simple aerobic activity like taking the stairs instead of the elevator or taking a brisk walk for short distances rather than taking the car, paired with a healthy diet, can significantly boost metabolic rate and help avoid weight gain, or promote weight loss.

Study supports mammogram screening in young women

Location of study: U.S.
Study subjects: Patients with invasive breast cancers diagnosed in Boston between 1990 and 1999
Results: A new analysis has found that most deaths from breast cancer occur in younger women who do not receive regular mammograms, according to a report in CANCER, a journal of the American Cancer Society. The results of a study conducted at Harvard Medical School in Boston indicate that regular screening before age 50 should be encouraged.
Significance: Study co-author Dr. Blake Cady, professor of surgery emeritus, comments, "The biological nature of breast cancer in young women is more aggressive, while breast cancer in older women tends to be more indolent. This suggests that less frequent screening in older women, but more frequent screening in younger women, may be more biologically based, practical and cost-effective."

No sleep can lead to bad eating habits

Location of study: Sweden
Study subjects: 14 normal-weight men
Results: As little as one night's sleep deprivation makes a person more likely to purchase food that's higher in calories and buy greater quantities of food, according to a new study published in the journal Obesity. The study also found that sleep deprivation led to increased blood levels of ghrelin, a hormone that increases hunger. However, there was no correlation between individual ghrelin levels and buying more food during a shopping trip, indicating that other personal factors come into play, too.
Significance: "We hypothesized that sleep deprivation's impact on hunger and decision making would make for the 'perfect storm' with regard to shopping and food purchasing, leaving individuals hungrier and less capable of employing self-control and higher-level decision-making processes to avoid making impulsive, calorie-driven purchases," says the study's first author Colin Chapman, MSc, of Uppsala University.

America unified by 9/11

As a firsthand witness to the destruction of the World Trade Center, my lingering memory is less about the perpetrators' callous disregard of human life than the unification of my fellow New Yorkers. Individual walls came down and the playing field, from CEO to messenger, was leveled as New Yorkers pulled together and opened up in a heart warming manner. The tragedy of 9/11 left me with the indelible feeling that in times of crisis, our nation will move beyond our differences and remind the world why we are named the "United" States.

Agent Orange not meant as weapon

Re: 'US policy is full of gas' (Metro, Sept. 10) In his letter, Calvin Davis asserts that the United States used chemical weapons (Agent Orange) in Vietnam from 1961 to 1971, killing 400,000 people and causing 500,000 birth defects. First, Agent Orange was not used as a chemical weapon, but rather as an herbicide/defoliant to deny the VC large swaths of the countryside. It was not until later that the debilitating effect of Agent Orange on human beings was determined. If Agent Orange had been intended as a chemical weapon, the U.S. would not have exposed large numbers of its own soldiers to it, as was the case. Incidentally, that the U.S. government refused to take responsibility for the health problems suffered by Vietnam veterans exposed to Agent Orange is scandalous, but it is not related to use of "chemical weapons."

Red Bulls' Petke learns on job, retains fiery persona

MLS. The Red Bulls head coach is trying to learn to be a little more mellow in his first season in charge.

Mike Petke has the Red Bulls tied for first place in the Eastern Conference. / GETTY IMAGES

Red Bulls head coach Mike Petke has 28 games on the job and he is still very much learning. But he isn't changing as a person.

When Petke talks about coaching the Red Bulls, a huge smile comes across his face. Then the smile turns to worry and he begins to run his right hand over his forehead. Petke is caught up in his dream job while faced with the grim reality the team he took over this past offseason is still a work in progress. For a man who appeared in 169 league games for this franchise, it is something that consumes him in the quest for New York's first MLS Cup in history.

"I thought I was doing a better job of not taking my work home with me, but I'm not doing a better job in that aspect, apparently, according to my family," Petke told Metro. "But when you have a passion for something and you want things to work out, and you feel like you're doing as much as you can to make them work out and it doesn't work out every day, someone with my mentality it is very tough to deal with. That's definitely one of those things experience will bring me in years to come — learning how to not be so emotional and read things. I'd like to say that I learned my lesson with the red card [in August against Sporting Kansas City], but who knows? I'm a heat-of-the-moment kind of guy. This job would be a lot easier if I didn't care. This job would be really easy if I didn't care."

To star player Thierry Henry, nothing has changed about his head coach. He is still, according to Henry several weeks ago, "someone who cares incredibly and passionately about this team, about this club. Nothing has changed about Mike in my eyes."

He's more at ease now than when he took over the team in late January, just five weeks before the start of the regular season. He's growing as a head coach, but comfortable? Not a chance.

"I think enough people critique me from the press to my boss to, I'm sure, players. I've learned a lot and I feel like I do think I put things in place. I think there's a long way for me to go to be a successful, consistent coach," Petke said. "But I'm OK with that, I know it's a learning process. One thing I'll never be is a cliche — a typical comfortable coach. The minute that happens, it is time to do something else."

Henry scandal

Henry knows Petke's passion

Henry and Petke had to be separated during practice two weeks ago, an altercation that led to Henry being benched for the first half against D.C. before entering in the 55th minute.

That's the passion New York fans love from Petke — but it has always been that way for their head coach. KRISTIAN DYER

GREG HANLON

When the Giants started the 2011-12 season not many expected a Super Bowl — not unlike 2013. Hanlon chronicled that run in the book "'Our Town': The Giants who Won a Super Bowl and a Battle for New York."

A GIANT KIND OF 'TOWN'

What did you think of the 2011 Giants going into the season?
I wasn't as pessimistic as most fans and writers were. Each year of the Eli [Manning]-[Tom] Coughlin era, the Giants seem to find their water level at around 10-6 or 9-7, give or take a couple injuries and plays. I didn't see much reason to think otherwise.

When did you get the feeling that the team could be special?
Teams that win a Super Bowl need to be good, but they also need to be lucky.

In Week 14 in Dallas, the Cowboys could have all but eliminated the Giants from playoff contention with a win. To win the game, they needed only to convert one third-down play.

Quoted

"In the NFL, if you have a great quarterback, you always have a chance."
Greg Hanlon
On the Giants' chances in 2013

How does that team, with diminished expectations coming off no playoffs, compare to the 2013 team?
It's a fair comparison. Both teams are coming off seasons in which they had their fate in their hands but fumbled it away by playing their worst when it mattered most.

What about the maturation of Eli Manning over that, his second Super Bowl season, and becoming the QB he is now?
For sure 2011 was Manning's best year. This was particularly sweet after the whole manufactured "elite" controversy. More than ever, I think there's a realization among Giants fans that Manning has to be great in order for this team to be successful.
